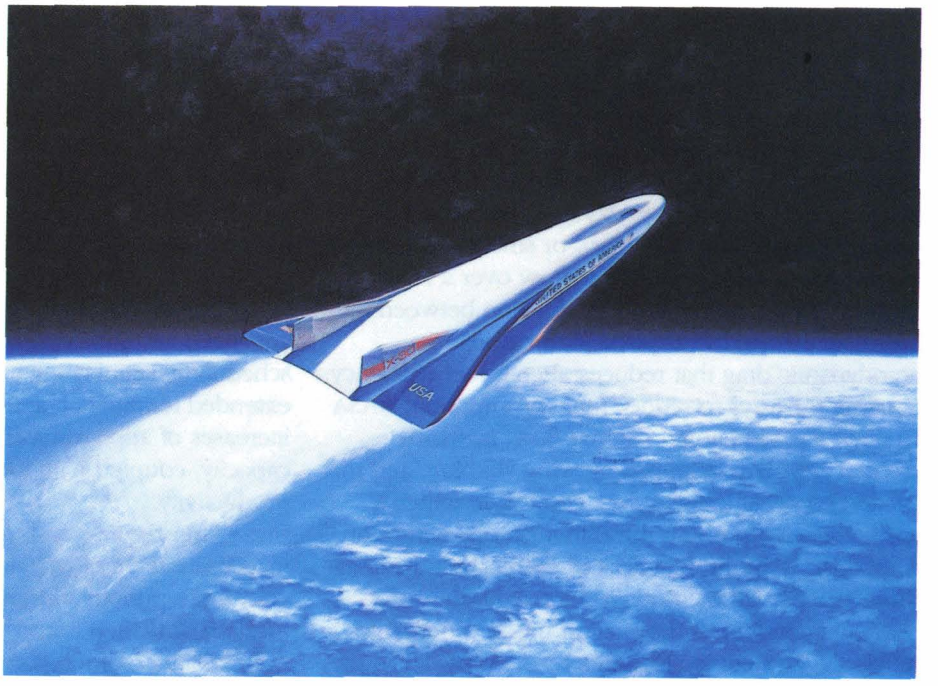
THIS IS WHERE THE FUN STARTS! The school portrays a new look after the exterior decorators (some upper classmen) decorated the school following the Homecoming pep rally.

Hypersonic Research

The aero-space plane concept offers access to space with airplane-like flexibility, high responsiveness and reduced cost

At right is an artist's concept of the planned X-30, an experimental hypersonic flight research vehicle targeted for flight tests in the latter years of the century. The X-30 is the focal point of a joint NASA/Department of Defense (DoD)/National Contractor Team National Aero-Space Plane (NASP) program.



The program is aimed at eventual development of a revolutionary class of spaceplanes capable of taking off and landing horizontally like an airplane, operating in the upper atmosphere at hypersonic speed (more than 3000 miles per hour) or flying directly into Earth orbit. Such craft would offer on-demand access to space with airplane-like flexibility and high responsiveness and, because they would not require the extensive facilities needed for vertical space launches, they promise substantial reduction in launch costs.

The National Contractor Team is a group of five major aircraft/engine firms who are sharing development costs with NASA and DoD. The team includes three airframe companies — General Dynamics, McDonnell Douglas Corporation and Rockwell International — and two engine manufacturers — Pratt & Whitney Division of United Technologies and Rocketdyne Division of Rockwell International.

In mid-1991, NASP researchers concluded the first of five planned design cycles, during which the initial working configuration of the X-30 was selected; "slush" hydrogen was selected as the propellant to reduce fuel weight; and agreement was reached on the type of propulsion system. It will be a three-segment system with three different modes of propulsion: a low-speed module for takeoff to Mach 3, a high-speed ramjet module, and a hypersonic scramjet module. A substantial data base has been developed through ground tests of subscale engines in wind tunnels; a large scale engine in final configuration will be tested to Mach 7 by 1993.

The basic material of the X-30 airframe will be a metal composite made of high-strength silicon fibers embedded in an advanced titanium alloy; it is called TMC, for titanium matrix composite. NASP researchers are building and ground testing several large-scale TMC structures.

The current phase of the NASP program involves additional design phases and complementary research in aerodynamics, aerothermodynamics, propulsion, high temperature materials and structures, computational fluid dynamics and other key technologies. This technology development phase will continue until early 1993, when a decision is due as to whether to proceed with construction of two X-30 prototypes.

The technical program is managed by the NASP Joint Program Office, located at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, and staffed by Air Force, Navy and NASA personnel. Government research facilities participating include NASA's Ames, Langley and Lewis Research Centers; the USAF's Aeronautical Systems Division, Air Force Weapons Laboratory and Arnold Engineering and Development Center; the Naval Surface Weapons Center; and the Department of Energy's Los Alamos Laboratory.

Highway Mapping

In the United States, it is estimated that unreported deteriorating road conditions cost the nation some $16 billion a year in wasted fuel, excessive vehicle repairs and time lost from jobs.

Ohio State University's Center for Mapping (Columbus) is developing a system designed to reduce the time and money needed to gather information on highway conditions. The Center for Mapping, one of NASA's 16 Centers for the Commercial Development of Space, is spearheading a multi-organizational 18-month pilot project called the Global Positioning System for Transportation Planning.

The project employs a prototype ground vehicle (below) that can automatically map and record transportation systems, including bridges, highways, railways, grass-mowing areas, equipment locations and secondary roads. The system offers additional utility in locating roadways in need of repair and other hazardous conditions, including the sites of fatal accidents.

Operation of the vehicle — a standard van — draws upon NASA-developed imaging technology and navigation data from the Navstar Global Positioning System (GPS), a constellation of satellites operated by the Department of Defense to provide precise positioning information for aircraft, surface vessels and ground vehicles. As two video cameras in the van scan the local terrain and acquire images, the van's GPS receivers record — with an accuracy of one to five meters — the latitude and longitude of the imaged scene. The positioning data is processed, stored in digital format, and eventually downloaded into computers used for geographic purposes, called Geographic Information Systems (GIS).

In addition to providing a visual record of transportation features, the system is ideal for mapping. This application alone is expected to save highway departments a great deal of time and money. Virtually all government agencies that use maps are switching to electronic databases. However, digitizing maps is expensive and time consuming. With the mobile unit, the digitizing is already done. The data can be entered into the database and converted into a format acceptable for processing in a GIS.

Other organizations participating in the project include the Federal Highway Administration, 38 state transportation departments and the Canadian province of Alberta. Corporate sponsors are Trimble Navigation, Sunnyvale California, which donated two GPS receivers, and COHO Camera Company, San Diego, California, which supplied the system's digital video cameras. Demonstrations and performance evaluations have been completed in Louisiana and Virginia and are planned for Colorado, Ohio, Florida and along the West Coast.

"Lincoln is very different from my school. The teachers here are cool, they aren't in Switzerland."

"Iowa is a very nice place and the people are very nice."
–Jose Quetglas

This year, our school was very fortunate to receive six exchange students. All of whom were fine students and very interesting people.

Tomo Akiyama came from Tokyo, Japan and spent his year with Reed and Janet Shaffer. He felt that "school is easier here than in Japan. In Japan the teachers are strict and there are harder classes." He enjoys listening to music and reading books in his spare time.

Brtitta Bocher and Jennifer Buttkus both came from West Germany. Britta enjoys dancing and drawing during her free-time while Jennifer likes to play volleyball. Both liked the mixture of people they found in Iowa and were amazed that everyone knew everyone else in the community.

Steve Dupraz came from Vevey, Switzerland and stayed with Mike and Karolyn Rouse. He spent his free-time wrestling and playing football for the Panthers. He felt that Lincoln is "very different, the teachers here are cool, they aren't in Switzerland."

Lincoln had two more bright students, both of them from Spain. Jose Quetglas stayed with Rick and Debbie Wagner of Stanwood. He felt that "Iowa is very nice, and the people are very nice." In his spare time, Jose enjoys playing his guitar, horseback riding, or spending time with his friends. Bibi Orgaz was also from Spain. She spent her year in America with Lou and Shirley Grimm. Bibi spends here free-time in the company of her many friends she made here.

We hope that their stay in Iowa was a memorable one.

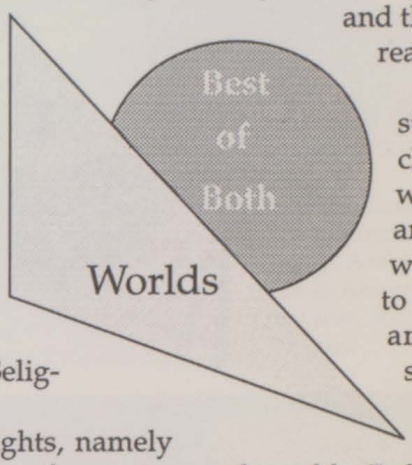
Lacking the men for slow dancing Tara Kuda and Kristyn Edwards decide to enjoy themselves with each other.

As the sun goes down the roar of the crowd goes up. The Homecoming game is underway. This year the fans were treated with a win. It made the festivities and the dance much more fun. This years win was the first in several years. The weeks enjoyment was topped off with the crowning of the homecoming queen, Heidi Seligman.

The night of all nights, namely Prom, started with hours of preparation for a good time. And a good time was had by all. The night was full of fancy outfits and good dances and was concluded with some really good lip syncs at After-Prom. The theme this year was "Because I love You" and the decorations were really fantastic.



The tears were steaming down many cheeks as the times we've known came to an end. The seniors walked down the isle to get their diplomas and listened to the speaker, Mr. Nelson, quote Dr. Seuss and talk about life in the real world. Before commencement was over the seniors realized that they were truely done with high school.

Theses activities help to ensure that our students get the "Best of Both Worlds."

Homecoming

Homecoming '90 was full of firsts and a few pleasant surprizes. Thursday was the annual parade and pep rally with Heidi Seligman crowned queen and John Demoss crowned king. Next on the list was an unscheduled event, but probably the students favorite, "T.P.ing" the school. The bonus this year was that the toliet paper was left up so all could see the magnificent creation Friday morning. Ilustrated on page one. Of course we had a mass clean up by students during lunch. Friday rolled around and so was the big game. Backed by a large crowd and lots of school spirt the mighty panthers beat C-L. The first time in a long, long time that Lincoln has beaten C-L and won a homecoming game. Saturday night was the dance and everyone had a great time movin' and grovin' to the theme "Pump Up the Volume."

J. H. Softball

The Junior high Softball team did extremely well this year. The "A" team, made up of mostly eight grade and some seventh graders, had a record of 5-0, and the "B" team, all seventh graders, had a record of 4-1.

As quoted by The Pioneer Herald, "Coach Koering was happy with the season, but the girls played especially well the last week. 'We had sound defense, good hitting, and fewer mental mistakes.'"

With over 20 girls, Mrs. Oldorf lead her girls to a 3-2-1 record for the 8th grade, and 4-2 record on the 7th grade team. Mrs Oldorf commented, "I feel the main importance in JH Volleyball is for everyone to get a chance to play. Not just the better ones, but every girl should be given a fair amount of playing time in a Junior High sport."

Day in which they did a light routine for the service men overseas to the song "From a Distance." They also sold a lot of candy to help with the fundraiser.

Becky Corbett commented, "We had a lot of junior high girls. I think it is important to have the girls see if they like it. I enjoy working with them and look forward to have them cheer in high school varsity sports. I was also glad to see that there was so much interest in the program and hope to see it continue."

J.H. Problem Solvers & Student Council

The junior high problem solvers main problem this year was on "transportation". First they researched the subject transportation and then discussed their findings. Next they did a "fuzzy sit," which is simulating what might happen in the year 2030 pertaining to transportation. They then had two hours to write about the problem without the use of their notes. Next they write out twenty problems and narrow it down to one problem. Using a five grid criteria, they pick one best solution. Once they find the solution they write out how to put it into effect and why it was the best solution.

Mrs. Kaefring commented, "It is a very excellent academic program that requires a lot of effort, critical, and problem thinking skills. The students this year did an excellent job."

The junior high student council was very active this year hosting two dances, and helping with Health Day. They also had a Junior High Awards Assembly with a picnic following. With a float in the homecoming parade they were a very active student council.

President was Kyla Brosh, vice-president, Jenny Lester, and treasurer/secretary was Jessie Weaver.

J.H. Chorus

This years junior high chorus is quite unique from most other chorus's. Why? Because there are no boys participating this year. They may not have many low voices, but these girls "learn their music quickly" and are still a very powerful choir even without boys. The junior high swing choir had their own pop's concert this year including "Westward Ho!" and many solo and group performances.

Crystal Bails sings her heart out at the Christmas concert.

J.H. Band

This years junior high band started off by marching at the half time of the homecoming football game which went "very well." The highlight of their year was the progressive concert featuring the eighth grade drummers in "Chopsticks." Not as many band members went to contest this year because it was so far away , but they still came home with twelve I's out of nineteen entries. The junior high jazz combo gave an outstanding performance at the pops concert with a variety of music selections.

Elementary Division

Lincoln's Finest

In their quest for more knowledge, the elementary can be found involved in many field trips and with many visitors throughout the year. Some of their trips they were on included Lake McBride to hike around the woods learning about nature, fourth grade field trip to the symphony to learn about music, and second grade trip to the Colonial Bakery to learn about the bread making process.

The elementary plays host to many guest speakers and special visitors such as Lovey Bear from St. Lukes; Louie, the Electric Bug from Iowa Electric; and the sheriff, who came to talk about science safety.

Another way the children in elementary learn about our world is to take part in celebrations and activities that we do not usually take part in such as Marti Gras, visiting the nursing home, pen pals with students from other states, and trips to West Branch to study Iowa history.

As a way to mix business with pleasure, the fourth through sixth graders have started a month long reading program called, "Rockin' for Reading," that ended with a 50's-60's dance and lots of prizes.

The elementary children are busy little people who are hard to keep track of. That is why they are some of Lincoln's finest.

Simply the BEST

Papers shuffle and a pen glides across the page as a teacher busily works attheir desk to get the papers corrected for class the next day. Even though the clock may say 6 a.m. or p.m., these unsung heros work to give the students the reputation that they deserve.

The shouts cross the battle field and the people listen as someone tries to get their point across in the mass of athletes that surround the one person. Who am I talking about you might ask yourself? I am talking about none other than the coaches. The people behind the teams that help to get the team and its members noted by more than just the proud parents. Coaches put in long hard hours for their athletes.

It is a dark night and the only one in the silent halls is the one man who is paid to be there. The janitors very seldom ever get noticed because they do most of their work when no one is around. Another group of poeple that don't get noticed as much as they should are the cooks. They cook meals for a couple hundred people only to have the food they cooked gone in a mere hour. The only thanks that the janitors and the cook get ate their paychecks at the end of the month so we tip our hats off to you now.

These are just a few examples of the people who help make Lincoln "Simply the Best."

◀ Keeping the school lunches fun is Mr. Grimm and Louise Bell's specialty at one of the popular fall cookouts.
